The Houghton Festival Readings are named for Jim Houghton, the former Richard Rodgers Director of the Drama Division and founder of New York's Signature Theatre, who dedicated his professional life to supporting writers in developing a body of work.

These staged readings, written by our second-year playwright fellows, have an abbreviated 29-hour rehearsal process and are cast with a mix of members of the graduating acting class, Juilliard alumni, and guest artists.

Along with bi-monthly Play Lab readings, quarterly PlayTime sessions, the September Playwrights Festival of workshop productions and end of the year scene showings, these opportunities for Drama Division actors and playwrights to work together on brand new work fosters collaborative relationships that will extend beyond their time in the school.
